ASSOCIATE OF ARTS

History

Students in DCB's Associate of Arts (AA) in History program are immersed in the study of events, patterns, and cycles that shape our present world. This social science major will examine the cultural backgrounds, political movements, conflicts, and technological developments humans have participated in across millennia. History is not simply the memorization of names, dates and facts, but rather a holistic understanding of the world that came before us.

Why study history?

The discipline of history allows students to better understand the world around them, no matter their future career path. Requirements for the Associate of Arts degree in History requires completion of the following classes: World Civilization, United States History, North Dakota History, World Regional Geography, History of Rock and Roll and International Politics/American Government. Graduates will leave with the critical thinking skills necessary to use primary source documents to construct thesis based written work.

Career choices

Graduates with an AA in History will have earned the marketable skills that can lead to a variety of future academic paths and career options. Historical inquiry allows for a better understanding of human social systems in several different fields. Of course, many students of history desire to explore the world of teaching history or social studies, and this is a great first step. Graduates will have the necessary preparation to continue their education at a bachelors and graduate level. Examples of some paths that graduate may follow include:

- Teaching (middle, high school, and post-secondary)
- Journalism
- Museum curation
- Law school
- Graduate degrees

“ My experience with the history program at DCB has been fantastic. Professor Sathre always finds ways to make material fun and easy to learn. Taking many classes in the history program at DCB has strengthened my love for history and confirmed my plans of becoming a history teacher! ”
